

NSW Electoral Boundaries Redistribution

21 October 2013

On 18 September, the final determination of state electoral boundaries for New South Wales was proclaimed. The new boundaries will apply for the first time at the March 2015 election. Any state district by-elections that take place prior to the March 2015 State Election will be conducted on the applicable 2004 district boundaries.

On the new boundaries, The Nationals will lose a rural seat, but gain Northern Tablelands due to the May 2013 by-election. The Australian Labor Party notionally loses two seats to the Liberal Party, Toongabbie (now Seven Hills) and Macquarie Fields, but gain Miranda following the October 2013 by-election. The newly established seat of Newtown has a notional Green majority.

A summary of the results as well as an electoral pendulum for the 2015 election is provided below. It is estimated that the new boundaries will require a swing of 14.7% for the Coalition to lose 25 seats and its parliamentary majority.

Summary of party standings

	Seats Held by Party
